Wireless access point without ethernet cable - [Solved]

2019/07/21

I Have an old DLink DIR-615. I would like to connect it wirelessly to my current network in order to be able to use it as an access point via an ethernet cable for another machine in another room that isn't wifi enabled. Is this kind of thing even possible? I worked through this tutorial:

<https://www.cnet.com/how-to/how-to-turn-an-old-wi-fi-router-into-an-access-point/>.

However, I got to the end and realized it requires the second router to be connected to the first one with an ethernet cable.
